Disclaimer Statement

I make no diagnosis concerning your health or the health of your baby. I am not performing your ultrasound looking for any abnormalities and/or any other health related factors that could be preexisting at the time of your session with me. This is an elective 2d ultrasound for purposes of obtaining photos and viewing your baby solely as a bonding experience between you and your baby. Your doctor will order a medical diagnostic ultrasound usually around 20 weeks, to do measurements and check on baby health and well being. This will be performed at a medical facility by a medical ultrasound technician. I do not provide a medical diagnostic ultrasound at your session nor will I be looking for anomalies.

- * It is highly unlikely but possible at the time of your session with me, I may suggest you be evaluated by a medical professional. In this instance it should not be a cause for alarm as only a Medical Professional can diagnose you. This would be simply a precautionary measure by myself at my discretion if by chance I happen to notice something suspicious and/or deem necessary. I may also just want to make a courtesy call to your doctors office after your visit with me. In either case you give me permission to contact your doctors office and/or hospital and authorize me to provide them with a verbal explanation of suspicion only. I emphasize I am not and will not be looking for any anomalies or issues with you or baby as I am scanning for purposes of bonding only. This disclaimer would only be needed in a very rare circumstance that I deemed something notable to contact your physician.
- * It is unlikely but also possible a facial abnormality undetected at your diagnostic ultrasound may show later on in the 3rd trimester when performing an elective 2D bonding ultrasound. If you have any questions concerning what you see on screen or the health of your child you should ask to be seen by your physician.

Imaging:

I try to obtain the best photos possible during your 2D session however many times the baby can be uncooperative and/or other factors may contribute in not obtaining clear crisp images. Keep in mind every 2D scan can have varying results as every expecting mother and baby are different. Some scans can produce multiple 2D images while others can be a challenge to get 1 face shot, some of these factors are listed below:

- * With every ultrasound I provide, I do my best to capture optimal images. 2D imaging quality can and will vary by but not limited to, low and/or cloudy amniotic fluid, late gestational age, unfavorable fetal lie(position) or maternal body habits (weight,build,size,structure) placental location, babies leg, arm, hand, feet in front of face which can create a blurred image. I always try my best to obtain as many images as possible during your session and go the extra mile if I am having trouble with any above factors however please be aware each woman and baby are different and as such each outcome of footage can be different. I can make no guarantee that your images will be perfectly clear as it will all depend on you, your body and your baby. I am in no way liable for incorrect gender reveals or other ultrasounds performed or any other related liability. I am in no way responsible for the outcome of the health of your baby.
